as we see it

■ You'll be happy to know that CBS News is back in the Emmy business.

A few years ago Fred Friendly, who then was running CBS News, decided that the Television Academy's awards in the news and documentary area were a lot of malarkey, that it was silly to have Academy members vote for news commentators and programs the same way they voted for actors and situation comedies. So CBS News refused to have anything to do with the Emmys for three years.

■ Now the hassle is over. After long negotiations CBS has accepted the Academy's new categories for awards in news and cultural programs, special-event coverage and documentaries. The awards—five of them—are more flexible than the old ones, and emphasize actual achievements rather than popularity. No more of those annual Huntley and/or Brinkley marches to the podium, in other words.

It's good that CBS News is back in the fold because this year, of all years, every possible bit of good programming has to be eligible if the Emmys are to be taken seriously.

■ So few of the new series have attracted critical approval or audience enthusiasm, and so many of the most popular series are creaking with age, that Academy members are going to be hard put to vote intelligently for outstanding comedy series, dramatic series, actor in a comedy series, actor in a dramatic series, etc.

Luckily, in the 31 categories of awards, two-thirds will be for "outstanding achievements" in a regular series or a special program. At least in these categories there will be some decent alternatives.

■ For the regular series and regular series performance awards, though, perhaps the Academy would be well-advised to call a moratorium this year.

'TO BE PERFECTLY HONEST ABOUT IT...'

Listening to some of those people who 'almost never turn the thing on'

By H. Allen Smith

There were eight of us, neighbors in suburbia, assembled in Sam Fennel's living room that Saturday afternoon. The women were huddled down at the piano-end of the room and the men were talking about triple-A-rated debentures and call options and other matters beyond my comprehension, so I let my ear pick up a few shreds of the upwind girl-chatter. The ladies were discussing how Mae Boles was redoing her upstairs and there was talk of drape shades and new upholstery and then the female contingent took off for the Boles house on Five Bridges Road to have a look at work in progress. That left four.

I pulled the boys away from the Gross National Product and we talked about the capriciousness of the town's water supply and then Sam Fennel changed the subject. "Y'know," he said, "yesterday my watch went on the fritz, so I turned on the TV and there was this fella . . . Hubert Deems, Downing . . . something like that . . ."

"Hugh Downs," I said.

"That it?" Sam asked. He seemed surprised that I knew it. "Never can keep those fellas straight," he went on. "He was talkin' to this looker, Barbara Something, and . . ."

"Walters," I said.

"That 'er name?" asked Sam. At that instant something clicked in my mind. Within the last year Sam Fennel had mentioned Barbara Walters to me—both Sam and I had known her father, Lou Walters. I was about to jump him about it, but he was rambling on about the conversation between Hugh Downs and Barbara, something to do with insomnia, Curt Kenworthy, who is a lawyer in the city, was reminded of an insomnia cure he got from a haggard nephew out at the University of Michigan—something about going through the alphabet and naming a tree for each letter. "Sounds real simple," said Curt, "but wait till you get to 'N.' That'll keep you awake the rest of the night."

I mentioned that when I wake up in the middle of the night and can't get back to sleep, I sometimes duck downstairs and watch an old movie.

"You mean," broke in Curt, "they have TV shows all night long? And you get up and look at them?"

"Certainly," I said. "Doesn't everybody? They've got one movie that starts around 4 in the morning."

The others expressed surprise. Their manner suggested that they had never heard of the late late late shows. For a moment I felt good that I am a writer by profession; writers are usually forgiven their vast lunacies. Then I happened to remember that my wife and I once talked about getting a TV for upstairs, and she said the Fennels and the Kenworthys had second sets in their bedrooms. I wondered what the hell for.

"Sleep like a log, ordinarily," Sam Fennel said, "but when I do wake up, I read. Good time to catch up on my reading."

I wanted to tell about the all-night confusion of tongues that is available on radio for insomniacs, but Matt Boles got the jump on me. Matt's a plumbing contractor.

"They sure have some weirdies on TV these days," he said. "Few nights ago I got home late from the city and stopped in Fogarty's down by the station for a cooling-off martini and they had the box all lit up with a couple of jokers, guy by the name of I think Allen Ross and another fella, a real creep, you may have seen him . . . has this hair . . ." Matt wriggled his fingers above his scalp, to suggest the nature of the hair, and went on, ". . . a mess of hair, looks like one of those hippie dips, and so the one . . ."

"Not Allen Ross," I said firmly. "Allen and Rossi."

"Oh," said Matt. "Well, anyway, the one without hair was telling the one that looks like a sick buffalo—you know the one I mean, Sam, you musta seen him sometime—always says 'Hello dere'—the kids go for him."

"Can't place him," said Sam. "To be perfectly honest about it, I almost never turn the thing on. Don't seem to remember any Hello Dere. But hey, come to think of it, I did happen into a pretty good spy yarn one night last week. I was pooped. Young Sam and a couple of his pals lit out for Angelo's Pizza Palace and left the set going and I was about to switch it off and get to some office reading and this yarn came on, a G-man played by a pretty fair actor, fella with an unusual name, Ephriham Zimmerweiss, some damn thing like that . . ."

"Efrem Zimbalist," I said, and added, "Junior."

All three of my neighbors now looked at me in an arch sort of way.

"Hey," said Curt Kenworthy, "you must spend a lot of time consortin' with the boob tube."

"Sure," I said. "Most-evenings. And sometimes in broad daylight."

"I almost never turn it on," Sam Fennel said again. Just then the women came back and I gathered up my wife and we kited out for home.

On the country road where we live I spotted Ed Lashley clumping along in the twilight. Ed is a retired manufacturer who spends a lot of time walking the neighborhood lanes, and I usually stop my car and visit with him. Most of the time his conversation follows the same pattern: All Democrats ought to be taken out tomorrow morning and hanged. →

This time he passed along a bit of gossip about a neighbor who was having some rather interesting domestic trouble and then out of a clear sky, Ed inquired: "You happen to see that fella Dean Martin on the TV the other night? He's the one they kid about the booze. He was telling this story about . . ." I recognized at once that there was a fly in this ointment, but I let him go on. He talked enthusiastically about several Dean Martin Shows, and mentioned the Gypsy Rose Lee program in passing, and said something about Love of Life. Finally I had to challenge him.

"Ed," I said, "what on earth has happened to you? You've always sworn up and down you wouldn't allow a television set in your house."

"I still won't," he said resolutely. "But I had to get one for Gustav and Margaret." Gustav and Margaret are his Swiss live-in help. "They threatened me. Threatened to pack up and leave unless I got 'em a TV. I had to go out and buy one and I stuck it back there in their apartment."

"So," I persisted, "how's it happen you know all about Dean Martin and all these other shows?"

"Accident," he said. "Gustav and Margaret take their day off and that's the time of the week I go into their quarters and check on things. A man has to know what's going on under his own roof. So while I'm in there checking around, I just turn the thing on, just to have a little noise going for company while . . ."

I didn't hear the rest. I was running over, in my mind, the names of the programs he had mentioned, and calculating the number of hours he must have been spending checking around in the servants' quarters. It was clear that he went in at cockcrow to get the farm programs and stayed till the final "Star-Spangled Banner."

We hadn't been home more than 10 minutes when a hook-and-ladder truck came up the drive and a uniformed fireman hopped off. It was the evening for our fire department to collect contributions. The fireman was a young man I knew, employed at a local meat market, so I asked him to come in while I wrote out the check. Before I handed it to him, a thought popped into my head. I gestured toward my television set and then asked him if he had color at home.

"No," he said. "Not much point in puttin' out the money. We almost never turn it on any more. Once in a while, if Lenny Bernstein is on, or like that. Once in a while maybe a ball game. Otherwise, naaarrrrrrgh!" He jabbed a thumb toward the floor and said, "Garbage!"

He went out and climbed aboard the hook-and-ladder and be-dogged if I didn't hear him say to the driver, "Le's wrap it up. Head for home. Wanna catch Get Smart half past 8. And they pulled away. I fixed myself a snack, checked the programs I had looked up earlier in the day, got into my black leather chair and settled down for the rest of the evening. And I said to my wife:

"They've got these billions and billions of dollars invested in this colossal business down in New York and out in L.A. and out in space with that Early Bird thing, and I do believe that we are the only customers. I have a feeling that I'm the only living American who looks in the programs to see what's on, walks across the room and uses as many as three fingers to deliberately turn the set on, and adjusts the color, and prepares for an evening of relaxation and . . . yes . . . enjoyment."

My wife, comfortably installed in her favorite spot on the divan, grinned and nodded.

"Is old Ephriham Zimmerweiss on tonight?" I asked.

"Who?"

"Never mind. He's on tomorrow."

She didn't argue with me. She knows that sometimes I talk funny, without any reason at all.

The Wild Wild West is not, mind you, your ordinary run-of-the-stage-line oater. It's distinguished by having weirdo baddies, incredible gimmicks and thoroughly Bonded story lines. Another thing it's got is girls. Whole sashes of them. It seems that Messrs. Gordon and West (played by Ross Martin and Bob Conrad, l. to r.) always end up each episode back in that railroad car with a pair of cuties and at least a jeroboam of Cordon Bleu 1859. The above-mentioned gents can be seen with an indicative host of representative sweets, ranging from mean nasty villainesses through Aztec princesses, girl friends of the ungodly, right on to one who portrayed the "enslaved girl friend of a mad subterranean nut." Good or bad, quelled or saved, they usually end up with West and Gordon—in that trusty old railroad car which you also see over there.

Sometimes the half-time shows are more competitive than the football games

By Melvin Durslag

If you ask the average viewer what he cares to see between the halves of a televised football game, he is apt to respond, "Something interesting, like test patterns."

What he gets, as a general rule, is the drum-and-bugle corps from Rattlesnake Union High in Texas, an interview with the press agent of one of the teams and a review of the statistics.

Those engaged in the business of selling amateur and professional football have come to suspect sensitivity on the part of fans to half-time shows, and a movement is generally under way to improve the quality. The pros hold meetings on the subject, and, once a year, directors of college football bands attend a national convention at which are discussed matters of such vital concern as marching routines, showmanship, majorettes and band scholarships.

It is against the law in the NCAA for colleges to audition high school football players, but it is perfectly legal to give a tryout to a guy who plays the glockenspiel or trombone.

"Before you award a band scholarship," says Tommy Walker, former band director at USC, "you have to make sure that the musician is able to march and play. Some can do excellent concert work, but they can't play while they walk."

Now employed as director of entertainment for the pro New Orleans Saints, Walker staged perhaps the most grandiose half-time show in football history last January at the Super Bowl game. Confronted by a two-network audience of roughly 60,000,000 and determined to outdo the colossal show put on by the amateurs at the Rose Bowl where Purdue fielded a dazzling company of 310, including girls offering the greatest display of flesh this side of St. Tropez, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle hired Walker to produce a whopper, and Tommy did—$53,000 worth, a new half-time record.

By charter plane from Louisiana came the 123-piece Grambling College Band. It was joined by 175 musicians from University of Arizona. A mixed chorus of 150 voices was enlisted, along with a drill team of 200. And a horse-drawn carriage brought to the center of the field Al Hirt, backed up by a company of 36 trumpeters.

When the music ended, a football-shaped object rising 15 feet was wheeled out. Someone applied a toe—and out flew two rocket-belt men, propelled by motors that carried them 100 feet into the air. One was → dressed in the colors of the Green Bay Packers, the other as a Kansas City Chief. In a smashing finish, Walker released 300 pigeons and 10,000 multi-colored balloons.

The spectacle amounted to quite a departure from what is believed to be the original half-time show—a community sing among Yale students at a game in 1891. When the sing ended, the mascot of the Eli, an English bulldog named Handsome Dan I, was paraded before the stands.

Short on showmanship, the Ivy League today stages half-time shows peculiarly its own. "We don't have great marching bands like they do in the Midwest," says a Harvard man. "Nor do we have the girls they do in Texas. Or the card stunts of the West Coast. What we lack in production we make up for in bad taste."

Sex is a popular theme for an Ivy League half-time show. Other subjects touched have been LSD, marijuana, hippies and politics. An Ivy League band ascended to its crest one time when, as it entered the field at half time, the man on the stadium microphone announced, "And now, ladies and gentlemen, the band nobody dares to show on television . . ."

"The Ivy League today makes an effort to eliminate lewdness and controversy from its half-time activities," says Charles Loftus, sports publicist for Yale. "All scripts must be submitted before the game."

Networks have not been above taking advantage of nationally televised half-time shows for commercial messages in their behalf. At a game at the University of Pittsburgh stadium three years ago, the Pitt band, marching on the field, spelled out "NBC." A university official then presented a certificate to an actor playing the lead in an NBC series, after which the band maneuvered into a profile of Bob Hope. On the field microphone a gentleman announced, "We salute NBC-TV as it embarks upon another season of great entertainment."

Striving to improve its entertainment, UCLA's band department recently dispatched a questionnaire to California sportswriters. It inquired:

"What types of show would you like to see this season: (a) precision marching (b) animations of real objects (c) shows that tell a story (d) formations on a single theme (e) salute type shows (f) pageantry?"

"What music would you like to hear: (a) popular (b) classical (c) jazz (d) show tunes (e) rock and roll?"

A fierce competitiveness has developed among the bands. Bud Wilkinson reveals that when he was athletic director at Oklahoma, the band director asked if he could scout next week's musical opponent. Wilkinson said no.

Television has led to other unorthodoxies. Last year a reporter for the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner turned up with a shocking exposé. He disclosed that some members of the USC band had been recruited merely to fill out the ranks and couldn't play the instruments they were carrying.

Angrily, USC responded that bands all over the country contain members who are faking it. Half-time entertainment is show biz, and marching musicians aren't that plentiful. As Tommy Walker points out, the game isn't for lollipops who play concert.

If someone writes a biography of Edward Leo McMahon, it ought to be titled "McMahon on the Move." As a performer and entrepreneur, Johnny Carson's television announcer ("And me—I'm Ed McMahon") is moving onward and upward with the zeal of a tax assessor.

Between on-stage work in television and radio and off-stage business ventures, McMahon works 10 to 12 hours a day, six days a week. But he's never too busy to add new endeavors.

A few months ago Ed began to make phonograph recordings as a singer (after taking singing lessons). His first movie, "The Incident," in which he plays "a mean guy who is tough with his wife," has just been released.

McMahon's business ventures include Lew Schwartz-del Sol Productions, Inc., of which he is president. The company produces industrial and entertainment films, designs exhibits for public and trade shows and makes all kinds of graphics. It designed the Vatican Pavilion exhibit at New York's World's Fair in 1964-65.

McMahon has a second firm, Unicorn Creations, Inc., which designs paper products, including artistic post cards, fancy stationery and decorative spice plaques to brighten kitchen walls and cabinets. "It's a very small company, but it's profitable," says its leader.

On paper, at least, Ed also has Parthenon Productions, Inc. Parthenon pays his secretary's salary, owns a car and pays for maid service in the McMahon suburban home north of New York City. Parthenon may produce something eventually.

Then there is Delphi Productions, a talent-management business which Ed and his personal manager Robert Coe operate.

McMahon has registered the name of Corinthian Productions, Inc., which has done nothing yet but is eagerly waiting for its big break.

McMahon, a World War II veteran and now a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve (he returned to active duty as a pilot during the Korean War), drives to New York City each morning. He parks his car in a garage near the RCA Building and immediately telephones his secretary about new ideas and things he wants to do. Besides the small office supplied by the network at NBC headquarters, McMahon has his own larger office for his myriad activities in the Warwick Hotel a few blocks north.

Just what motivates McMahon, who is 44 years old, is not easy to determine with certainty. Does he approach each day as laden with golden opportunities? Not necessarily. Does he bound from bed with the nagging con-

'AND ME— I'M ED McMAHON'

... who turns out to be a half-dozen characters,
all moving ahead at full speed

By Val Adams

cern that this is the last chance to pull everything together and thwart disaster? Possibly. It may be that Ed is unsure of his motivation except for a deep desire for success and security.

About two years ago McMahon, then well established as Carson's announcer, took a job as host of a minor-league radio show, "Fortune Phone," on WNBC in New York. Later he acknowledged that he had done it because of reports that Carson might quit his television show. McMahon left local radio after it was determined that Carson would stay.

Whatever it is that makes McMahon tick, the ticking supplies jokes for Carson. Johnny even carries the ribbing off-camera. He once joked to a studio visitor during a music rehearsal: "You want a shoe shine? Your shoes need half soles? Ed will do it."

Ask Ed if he's trying to corner all the money in the world and he replies: "I'm really not. I just like to be active. Performing is not enough to satisfy me. I like to fiddle around in other things. I don't worry about money. Money follows success. Be successful." McMahon declines to disclose his annual income, but a recently published report put it at about $250,000.

Ed does "Monitor" on the NBC Radio network; a daytime game show, Snap Judgment, on NBC television; and commercials for Budweiser beer. He has been inching up on commercial success since he was hired nine years ago as the announcer on Carson's Who Do You Trust? daytime show on ABC. But he almost lost the Carson connection when Johnny was hired by NBC in 1962 to succeed Jack Paar on Tonight. NBC reportedly did not want McMahon. "I guess that's true," Ed says. "But Johnny insisted he wanted me, so I came along."

Some people in the television industry think McMahon doesn't measure up to the standards normally demanded of top-flight announcers.

Says one detractor: "Ed is not a very good announcer. His makeup—physically and in the way he talks—doesn't really have the symbol of the announcer type the networks are looking for. Ed is a very lucky man."

If McMahon is less than best, why is he riding high? Art Stark, former producer of Tonight, says: "What makes Ed liked is that he hugely enjoys his work. He likes people and therefore people like him. He's a social animal. There has been criticism of Ed for laughing it up so much on the Carson show, but it is not put on. Ed is honest, and when he laughs, he is genuinely amused." →

During the taping of Tonight, McMahon endears himself to the studio audience by kidding the commercials, which the viewers do not see or hear. When the chitchat of Carson and guests is interrupted for a commercial insert, Ed will step forward and say: "One of the great blessings in being here in the studio is that you miss the commercials. But for your information, one of them going on now is about two dames who see a dove flying in the window. The truth is the two dames are really smashed."

Stan Irwin, producer of Tonight, introduces McMahon to the studio audience as "205 pounds of voice." During Carson's opening monolog, Ed stands a few feet away, beside the camera that is shooting Johnny. In a sense, Johnny plays to Ed, who reacts, prods and interjects comments.

McMahon spends about two hours rehearsing his commercials each afternoon, but he has little or no conversation with Carson before the show. "I only see Johnny for maybe a minute before we start taping," says McMahon. "Once the show is on and Johnny is talking away, my hardest job is trying to determine whether I'm in or out of the conversation. If he suddenly tosses me a question, I have to ask myself whether it's rhetorical or about something that's happening right now. I try not to get in the way of conversation between Johnny and his guests. I'm like a catcher in baseball. I can help the pitcher but he's the one who has to throw the ball."

When Ed has no news from the boss after the show, he knows that's good. "It means I'm doing all right," says Ed. "There is never any praise, but no criticism means I'm doing okay."

McMahon did get bad news at least once. "Johnny complained that I had stepped on his line," Ed recalls. "I didn't mean to and I didn't even realize it when it happened. Johnny had been talking about mosquitoes and how they bit only passionate people. Instinctively I slapped my wrist, and it got a laugh from the audience. After the show Johnny criticized me for killing a line he was building up to."

But overall, Ed insists that his relations with Carson are good: "We're swinging along pretty good now. Our relations have never been better. He's always been very gentlemanly. One thing that is good for me is that I know Johnny's manner, which some people don't. Johnny's right to the point—no fooling around. Some take it for coolness. I know it isn't. Every two or three weeks we go to dinner after the show. We usually go to Danny's Hide-A-Way, where Johnny feels comfortable."

As Carson's foil, McMahon has been called a straight man, second banana and the devil's advocate, but the role is actually a combination of many things. "I'm not vying against Johnny," says Ed. "I prod him and get him into something. I'm the back-up guy. I must be there when he needs me and off when he doesn't need me. Sometimes we get five minutes out of nothing. I supply filler material that gets us from one place to another."

McMahon, who was a bingo announcer in a carnival at 16 and later a boardwalk pitchman in Atlantic City before getting his TV start in Philadelphia, changes shirts and suits about four times a day to look fresh for each television show and other appearances. He prefers dark suits because they are slimming. He does not smoke but likes to drink—"although not as much as some people say," he adds.

He is excited about his first movie. He'd like to do more, although the work has drawbacks for a man of action. Those long waits between takes in the Bronx, where the movie was filmed, almost got him down.

"Movie making is tedious," says Ed. "Until I found a telephone near the set, I was going out of my mind." END

Is Brinkley Ending TV Career?

The year ahead could be the last for the fabulously successful Huntley-Brinkley tandem. The twinkly one wants to quit. "After the November elections I'm going to talk to NBC about getting out," David Brinkley says. He concedes his contract has another half-dozen years to go, but he feels "12 years is long enough" in the evening news slot. What does he want to do next? "I'm a writer at heart, you know," he points out. Is his idea to write for print rather than TV? "Of course," he replies. NBC News officials doubtlessly are aware of Brinkley's restlessness. John Chancellor and Sandy Vanocur are being warmed up as possible stand-ins.

Is public television's first weekly network show getting through to many people? The Nielsen program raters don't report audiences to unsponsored shows, and claim they haven't had occasion to "break out" any figures on the Public Broadcast Laboratory's tune-in. But, as might be expected, curiosity has prompted a few commercial networkers to estimate the rating, based on what's left of the known audience after the percentages viewing Bonanza, The Smothers Brothers and Ed Sullivan and other Sunday night shows have been subtracted, as well as audiences for nonnetwork stations. PBL's pit-tance: 0.9—or something less than 500,000 homes watching. A commercial networker said: "I don't think even the educators, who are supposed to care, are watching it!"

Paddy Chayefsky, who has not penned a line for TV since "The Catered Affair" 14 years ago, has agreed to turn out a scenario for CBS Playhouse. "He's the last of the famous writers of TV's Golden Age to come back to the medium," CBS program chief Mike Dann exulted. "I've been calling Paddy practically daily for 18 months and he finally gave in." Dann said he had no idea what sort of story Chayefsky would write or how soon.

Look for those taped remakes of stage and film classics (i.e., "The Desperate Hours," "Dial 'M' for Murder") to turn up even more frequently on ABC next season as so-called "movie night specials." Ten are on tap for this season. For 1968-69, however, David Susskind, who is producing eight of this year's, and ABC's Hubbell Robinson (Stage 67) each may turn out eight such productions. And Susskind's batch tentatively includes one original—the forerunner, he hopes, of a breakaway from rehashes of familiar plots. One of the upcoming remakes, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," on Jan. 7, will, incidentally, run two and a half hours.

Everybody in network TV assumes there will be prime-time movies seven nights a week next year, but no network so far has owned up to plans to grab Mondays, the last movie-less night. Latest trade rumor: It'll be ABC, and the flicks will open at a new earlier hour—8:30 (Eastern Time).

OUR CRITIC—PRO AND CON

Again Mr. Amory and I have a difference of opinion. In his Oct. 21 review he gave High Chaparral quite a raking. Just what does he like?

Zanesville, Ohio

Cleveland Amory, I love you for that excellent Nov. 18 review of Ironside. We've finally seen eyebrow to eyelash. I knew it would happen someday. Any guy who loves a pipe and animals can't be all bad!

Fort Wayne, Ind.

OUTRAGED

When RCA lends its sponsorship, NBC its facilities and Perry Como his wholesome reputation to such psychedelical garbage as the rendition of the Jefferson Airplane, then we must know that our society is really getting sick and TV is only aggravating the malady. If only there had been a raised eyebrow by Perry or an announcer's caution that this was only a clinical sample. But, no, it was really an ad for a "trip"—in kaleidoscopic color yet—presented as Como-like entertainment. My own feelings: I just can't believe enough young folks care for such bilge.

VIETNAM AND TV

Re your Dec. 2 "The Big War in the Little Box." It is interesting to note that Mr. Maloney, like so many of his academic colleagues who gaze at the real world from their ivy-covered sanctuaries, offers no alternatives to TV's coverage of the war in Vietnam. If the war is "almost inaccessible to the human intellect," and if he is not getting his "wild exhilaration and excitement" from TV coverage, I would suggest that he put aside his lecture notes, grab the next jet from near-by O'Hare, and show those amateurs over there just where the war is, and how it should be reported.

Bob Bruner
News Center, WMT-TV

Mr. Martin Maloney must be congratulated for his fantastic insight regarding peoples emotional involvement in the Vietnam war.

WHITE CHRISTMAS (NBC), Saturday
KISS OF EVIL (NBC), Tuesday
THE BIG GAMBLE (ABC), Wednesday
I COULD GO ON SINGING (CBS), Thursday
ESCAPE FROM EAST BERLIN (CBS), Friday

In some areas network movies may not be seen on the days indicated.

'Tis the season of the last-minute pre-Christmas rush and the option is yours to relax for the fourth annual showing of "White Christmas," indulge your sentimental self with Judy Garland and soap opera or sink into an uncritical slump before the rest of the week's network-movie offerings. The to-be-jolly season is not yet upon us, cinematically at least.

"White Christmas," in case you need reminding at this point, involves Bing Crosby and Danny Kaye as a couple of ex-GI's jollyng up Christmas for their retired general, with Rosemary Clooney and Vera-Ellen (who offers some stand-out dancing) sharing 15 Irving Berlin numbers with them. The emphasis, however, is on relaxation rather than excitement.

The emphasis is strictly on sentiment in "I Could Go On Singing," which offers Judy Garland fans at very least their pop-tune Pagliacci making four separate appearances onstage at the Palladium, with vital and vibrant performance that gets to the essence of her mystique as a superb entertainer. Beyond these, alas, there's Judy as a sort of Madame X in the role of a top-rank singer beset by loneliness and personal problems. But those Palladium appearances make the schmaltz and padding worth tolerating.

Superhuman tolerance or single-minded devotion to the Kim Novak décolletage is required for "The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders," a stultifying orgy of tight bodices, bulgy bosoms, stolid lechery and impassive performance that no amount of cutting for television (the original film ran 127 minutes) can enliven. Any resemblance to "Tom Jones," albeit both are set in 18th-century England, is strictly in the wish of the press agent. Leo McKern, as a nearsighted assistant highwayman, provides "Moll Flanders" one bright moment.

Similarly, Gregory Ratoff, in his last film appearance, put fleeting life into "The Big Gamble." But this adventure film stalls down to an incredible and dull through-Africa-by-truck trek through the south of France, where most of the ersatz outdoor African scenes were shot. In contrast, authentic locales and careful production provide the interest in "Escape from East Berlin," based upon the actual escape therefrom of 28 persons in January 1962. Unfortunately stereotyped characters, stilted dialog and contrived bits of business do injustice to the truth.

But what is truth when it comes to vampires? Well, deck the halls with garlic rather than garlands and keep cool with "Kiss of Evil," originally labeled "Kiss of the Vampire," an above-average bit about blood-sucking in Bavaria circa 1910. 'Tis the season to be chilly, let alone spookily silly, it seems.

SPECIAL COLOR Maureen Stapleton and Martin Balsam star in Truman Capote's touching and wryly humorous romance.

At the edge of New York City lies a graveyard, sprawling and infinitely depressing. In ugly, endless rows the baleful, soot-stained monuments crowd together in sullen silence, like sterile trees in an orchard of stone.

To this dreary place come Ivor Belli, fiftyish and overweight, bearing yellow jonquils for the grave of his wife; and Mary O'Meaghan, fortyish and unmarried, hiding her loneliness behind a brave and desperate smile. Here, she hopes, she will find a lonely widower who wants to marry again. She is pathetic and sad, but she is fighting for her life—and is not to be pitied.

8:30 7 7 11 13 A CHRISTMAS MEMORY

[SPECIAL] [COLOR] Truman Capote narrates this award-winning dramatization of the sensitive Christmas memoir he wrote in 1956.

In a small Alabama town, young Buddy (Truman) Capote shared a desperately lonely childhood with his aging cousin Sookie, a gentle and eccentric spinster, and her two mirthless and unimaginative sisters.

Capote's reminiscence begins in "fruitcake weather," time for the annual ritual of baking Christmas cakes for the people Sookie and Buddy like and admire—from President Franklin D. Roosevelt to a missionary in Borneo.

The program, a moving entry in last season's "Stage 67," won a Peabody Award as the outstanding program of 1966. Other laurels include an Emmy for Geraldine Page, who plays Sookie (Donnie Melvin portrays Buddy); and an Emmy for Capote and Eleanor Perry, who adapted the story for TV.

Directed by Frank Perry (nominated for an Emmy), who also collaborated with his wife Eleanor on the memorable film "David and Lisa." Art direction by Oscar-winner Gene Callahan ("The Hustler," "America, America"). Filmed by Oscar-winner Conrad Hall, who skillfully captured the narrative's elusive atmosphere of secret pleasures and wistful solitude. Meyer Kupferman wrote and conducted the score. Diary of a Madman

The clerk begins to imagine himself a gentleman of society, and a suitor for the hand of a high official's daughter. Driven by a corrosive desire to show up the people he thinks have tormented and ridiculed him, the clerk cracks.

Coggio, who understands little English, learned his part phonetically. He has presented his stage adaptation in Europe as well as the U.S. (60 min.)

SPECIAL COLOR Twenty-five years ago, a parched Egyptian town became the center of a bloody and decisive struggle in World War II—El Alamein.

On Oct. 23, Montgomery (later field marshal and "Viscount Monty") mounted a major offensive against Rommel's Afrika Korps. Planes and artillery blasted the elaborate German mine fields that the Desert Fox called his "Devil's Gardens"—clearing the way for Monty's tank columns. At stake: the port of Alexandria, control of the Suez Canal—and final victory in North Africa.

The following testimony by Sebastian Cabot, co-star of CBS's Family Affair, is part of a rambling conversation that took place at the actor's summer home at Deep Cove on Vancouver Island in Canada.

"I came to America for the first time in 1947 to do 'Love for Love' with John Gielgud. We opened in Washington for a week, then did six weeks at the Royale in New York, a week in Boston, a week in Toronto, then London, Hamilton and Ottawa.

"I think the most vivid impression I first got of Americans was on the SS America coming over. I watched a man waving a lamb chop in his fingers like a baton. I'd heard of picking up chicken bones, but it was the first time I'd ever seen anyone pick up a lamb chop.

"I came back here to stay in 1955, when I did 'Kismet' with Howard Keel at MGM.

"I met my wife Kay through a boy friend of hers. We were both movie extras in London. He was a poet and painter—unpublished and ungalleried. He introduced me as 'the man with a new bawdy story every day.'

"When the war came, I tried to join up, but the Army, Navy and Air Force all turned me down as physically unfit. So I tried the Merchant Marine, but I hadn't any papers, and in order to get papers, I had to sail first. In order to sail first, I had to get papers, and so on.

"I would have taken a job as oiler, or worked on a bumboat, you name it. Unfortunately, skippers of oil tankers didn't want inexperienced oilers or bumboatmen.

"I tried to get work in a munitions factory, but they told me I was too fat to stand on my feet all day. As if it was their feet I was standing on! That finally wiped out all my patriotic enthusiasm.

"I went back to acting, but very few films were being made, so my wife landed me a job in a paper factory. I was a guillotine operator. Then the government got onto my past educational history. I left school at 14, but the government found out I had an excellent in science when I was 12. They decided I was much too good to be wasted on cutting up pieces of paper so they sent me to the National Institute of Medical Research.

"I was given a job driving a truck to pick up umbilical cords at Harley Street. Seriously. They were used for medical research.

"Funny thing about the war. Nothing was normal. A lot of people get nostalgic talking about it. We never took shelter, Kay and I. We went out to eat and to the movies. Once you got over the initial fright, it wasn't so bad.

"Closest I came to being hit was when a lot of shrapnel came down on the road near Hyde Park. Sparks everywhere when it hit the pavement.

A piece went past my ear. We took shelter under a canopy in a doorway. We found out when it got light that the canopy was made of glass!

"Kay had an incendiary bomb she'd extinguished herself. Should have kept it. Could really have shown off in L.A. with that.

"We used to lie in bed with the windows open so any explosion would go right through. One night a V-1 rocket demolished the whole block. All we got was blown windows and a cracked wall. An old actor chappie upstairs ran down yelling, 'We've had it.'"

Cabot with Johnnie Whitaker and Anissa Jones of 'Family Affair'

"After the war I did years and years of repertory and a lot of one-liners in movies. I won a part in a Hitchcock spy thriller over a lot of other linguists, mainly on the basis of my knowledge of French. When I got the script, my line was 'One Wiener schnitzel and a glass of beer'—in German!

"I did my first TV series in 1954—

The Three Musketeers, made in Italy for an American company. I played Porthos. Did a whole lot of films around that time. 'Heights of Danger,' 'Dual Alibi,' 'Babes in Bagdad,' 'Laughter in Paradise,' 'The Captain's Paradise.' These were mostly cameo roles. I appeared in so many cameos I became known as The Cameo King. 'Always a Bride,' with Peggy Cummins. 'Ivanhoe,' with the two Taylors, Robert and Elizabeth.

"Liz then struck me as being a very silly girl. She's matured a great deal. I haven't seen her for years.

"Because I was abroad so much, I became known as Britain's largest export. I'm down 50 pounds now, since my recent ulcer operation. I did 'Wonder Kid,' with Oskar Werner, in the Austrian Alps and Vienna, and 'Romeo and Juliet,' with Laurence Harvey. It was really on the basis of the good reviews of my Capulet, especially by Bosley Crowther, that I got the 'Kismet' role.

"My U.S. agent told me to lose my accent and he might be able to get me more TV roles. I appeared as a heavy on Gunsmoke after that, but there didn't seem to be much for me in Hollywood, so we planned to buy an old car and tour the States before going back to England.

"Then I got a lot more movie roles. 'Dragoon Wells Massacre,' with Barry Sullivan. 'Black Patch,' with George Montgomery. 'Terror in a Texas Town,' with Sterling Hayden. Now there is a man who really says what he thinks! And does what he likes!

"Movie and TV acting is so different from the stage. I don't think I'll ever go back to the stage again. I remember when I first made the transition. I had been doing a lot of BBC radio work. On radio you don't have to project anything but your voice.

"At any rate, I was a dialectician, so I never knew from day to day whether I would be Greek, Portuguese, French or what. On the schedule one day →

I was told to report to Alexandra Palace (the studios in London), where the TV installation was being tried.

"It hadn't been touched since the war and everyone was afraid the rats might have got into the transmitter or some such. But it worked. I played a swordsman in 'Julius Caesar.' The director told me to hold the sword closer to my nose. I thought I'd cut the ruddy thing off, but it looked a foot away on the screen.

"Some actors can never make that transition from stage to screen. John Gielgud has never made it. All his films have been flops. I think Michael Redgrave has done a good job of switching over. I think Mike is the best actor around—even better than Olivier. Mike is very, very shy, but we got on well.

"Another actor I admire is Orson Welles. I acted with Welles in 'The Lives of Harry Lime' series on radio. Played all kinds of dialects.

"I haven't seen or spoken to Welles since once in Madrid a few years ago. He wanted me for a part in a movie—he was thinking of making. He wanted me to shave off my beard.

"I was sitting in the chair, the barber clipping away, when I caught Welles giving the chap the sign to cut the whole thing off. I didn't mind a trim, but the damn man tried to force the issue.

"I remember one sequence in the Lime series where Welles, who always calls me Buster, was trying to get me to put on a particularly fruity English accent. I told him I'd sound like a fairy.

"Welles said: 'My dear Buster . . . in America every Englishman sounds like a fairy!'

"I was asked a couple years ago to make a movie in Canada—in British Columbia, near where I have a summer home. I would like to have taken the role, but the pay was far too low.

You can take a 25-percent cut, but my agent drew the line at a two-thirds drop.

"Walt Disney was a notoriously low payer. Still is. His studio at any rate. I did a French-Canadian in 'Westward Ho the Wagons.' Almost regret it now, the way those chaps are going on in Quebec. I also did a comedy heavy in 'The Sword in the Stone' for Disney. And 'Winnie the Pooh.' I've just finished doing a panther voice for Kipling's 'The Jungle Book' for Disney studios. Phil Harris does the bear and Louis Prima is King Louis of the Apes.

"Prima is completely uninhibited. Phil and I sing a song called 'The Bear Necessities.' It was a lot of fun.

"Disney, Walt that is, was onto the pulse of everything that happened at his studio. It seemed strange working there without someone asking, 'What will Walt say?' or 'Let's ask Walt for his opinion.' There wasn't anything that wasn't nearly perfect that Disney couldn't make 50-percent better!

"I never really made any money until I got the Checkmate TV series. I liked the professor role better than the butler I play on Family Affair, but the politics in television ratings is worth a whole book!

"Brian Keith, the father in Family Affair, is a warm, wonderful person. Not a bit like some of the heavies he used to play in movies. But he has a mercurial temper and has no time for unprofessional behavior, from actors or anyone else.

"I've heard him cuss out newspaper reporters who phone up during a taping to ask him stuff that's available in the biog from the studio. Then of course that means a lot of little girls with sweet voices have got to phone right back and smooth things over. That's the trouble with this business; you can't really be yourself as long as there's a man with a pencil or a microphone around.

"Of course if they aren't around, then you start to worry too!"

The Best of British Cigarettes

By Robert E. Mackin

In the cushy, well-carpeted offices of certain television producers, a wide-open but little-known talent hunt is under way. The search is not for the next Mia Farrow or Chet Huntley or even a new Joe Pyne. Aspiring ingénues and superserious and wise-guy types are out. Wanted instead are people who like to play games—games like Concentration; Jeopardy; The Dating, Newlywed and Family Games; Eye Guess; You Don't Say! and others which will award more than 6500 participants close to five million dollars in cash and prizes this season.

There's a good chance you can be one of the winners. Game-show producers are hungry for good contestants. The trouble is that, despite on-the-air appeals and numerous articles in TV GUIDE and elsewhere, few people know it.

Recently, after this reporter appeared on Password, just about all the neighbors asked: "How did you get on?" Pretty much the same thing happened when I appeared on The Match Game. Friends wanted to know if I knew someone. I didn't. And I was lucky I didn't. Knowing someone may be the only sure way not to be eligible for a game show. For producers have set down strict rules that bar possible participants who have friends connected with the show.

All I'd done was telephone The Match Game's producer, Goodson-Todman, to ask for a tryout. Four especially skeptical chums found this hard to swallow. They asked for the telephone number. I told them my spies at the telephone company had prepared an 1850-page Manhattan directory that listed the "secret" seven digits. Each of them got the message and placed the call. They all made the show.

As I did, they learned the → happy fact that getting a tryout for a television show requires no more than making a telephone call or writing a short letter. After that, knowing what producers are really looking for should give you a start to the tryout games and the actual show.

Says Bob Rubin, producer of Jeopardy, NBC's information game: "Sure, Jeopardy requires that contestants be knowledgeable, but the players we like best aren't necessarily Rhodes Scholars. We want personable people whom the audience can identify with."

Rubin tells of one ideal contestant, a Milwaukee housewife, who came up against a university professor on Jeopardy. Before show time, the professor tried to psych her out. He expounded pretentiously on his travels throughout the world. He projected pretty much the same way on the show itself. She kept her "cool" and became champion. "She was great and so was the show," recalls Rubin.

The incident capsules much of the "secret" of trying out for and participating in game shows. The lady from Milwaukee was not out to impress anyone with anything but her ability to play the game.

Declares Fred Tatashore of the word-association game Password, "Game shows need people who can be themselves. Usually, they're the people who are the good players."

Looking back on Password's six-year run, he recalls: "One of our best contestants was Kathy Quinn from Drexel Hill, Pa. She was the mother of 13 children, but that wasn't why she made the show. She made it because the mother of so many children spends a lot of time over an ironing board. She ironed near a TV set tuned in to Password. She soon realized she knew the game as well as any contestant on television. So she tried out and breezed through the test session and the actual game like a seasoned professional. Her winnings: $650."

But who has all that time to watch a game show? The answer is that most don't. And they don't have to.

"More people should realize that they can learn games like ours quickly," says Norm Blumenthal, producer of Concentration. He points out that complicated, hard-to-learn TV games would have little entertainment value. And he adds: "Any good television game must be simple enough to be played under tension," he says.

He remembers one woman who tested for Concentration under unusually trying circumstances. In obvious discomfort, she interrupted play briefly, then continued just as though nothing had happened. She made the show. Only after the test session ended did she reveal that she was having labor pains. The child, her sixth, was born a few hours later.

Of course, the actual show is more crucial than the test sessions. But contestants do survive, many of them with some handy spending money.

The money, however, is one thing it doesn't pay to think about. Says Fred Tatashore: "Anyone who's concerned about the money he might win is a bad risk as a contestant. He'll be too serious. The best contestants play for fun. If they win, they know it will be a nice payday, but they realize it won't make them rich anyway."

Even if you forget the money, you're sure to tense up. Producers like tension, because contestants soon stop being awed by the excitement and become part of it.

They report that all participants are turned on to a high key before and during a show. It happens to the coolest people. So charged up was one Password player when he completed the show's minute-long "lightning round" in 12 seconds that he jumped from his seat and ran around the stage. And it wasn't even his first time on TV. He was playing as a guest celebrity. His name: Peter Lawford. END

HAPPINESS IS A PLEDGANOUS GLOG

By Dick Hobson

Are public-service editorials on TV to be targets for merciless parody? Are pressing issues of the day to be fodder for the satirist's forked tongue? Now is the time for plain talk. Patrick L. Paulsen has at last complained once too often. Viewers are up in gorge, their krations dembil, suc-pars tirely, and krelbs are parges for slare all.

Paulsen is the man who double-talks his way through those kinky editorials which are a weekly feature of The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour. His delivery is so persuasive that as many as 15,000 persons a week write in for copies. One woman complained that it was unkind of the audience to laugh at Paulsen's "speech impediment."

The subjects range from the war on poverty to sex education. Paulsen on auto safety sounds like this: "Should we regroup our forces and advance or should we move to the bilge part back? The crux is stimulating ridge on the lee side yet tabled on the other. . . . We know that taking a firm grade is pledganous and facts will bear us out. . . . We suggest simply lowering the statistics which implies we stop counting accidents. This is a necessity for all who trudge and all those who glog the gains of life and I think we should all ask ourselves this question—How much?"

Despite the non sequiturs, a message often sneaks through. On recent court decisions: "Why should we have to tell embezzlers, kidnapers, burglars and murderers their rights? If they don't know their rights, they shouldn't be in the business." On firearms restrictions: "Let no man take away our liberties! Let's preserve our freedom to kill!"

This kind of comedy is Tom Smothers' bag. He says: "I set up the editorials for myself. I tried it. I couldn't hack it. I gave the spot to Pat." Pat scored.

Paulsen was an obscure stand-up comic, big in coffee houses, who went nowhere before the Smothers took him on last year. "We first met him at the Purple Onion in San Francisco," Tommy says. "After our performance he came right up and told me the show needed more comedy. He was putting me on, but I got up all tense, and told my brother, 'Boy, that guy is really weird!' Later, when I saw Pat perform, I flipped out. I like his dry understatement."

Paulsen has written several songs for the brothers over the years. One titled "Chocolate," the opening song on their million-selling second album, is a clue to his funny bone. It's about a fellow roller-skating on the edge of a vat of chocolate who trips, falls in, and yells "Fire!" because nobody would save him if he yelled "Chocolate!"

He appeared on Art Linkletter's Talent Scouts and Steve Allen's syndicated show but escaped "discovery." He played strip joints and hard-liquor clubs. The only place where he found real appreciation was on the "folk circuit"—small college-town clubs specializing in folk music.

Such a spot was the Ice House in Pasadena, Cal., where the Smothers brought their CBS producers to audition the melancholy comedian. Says Ice House operator Bob Stane: "Every room has a special type of comic. Ours is Pat's type. Our comics don't have to be one-up all the time. Pat appeals to intellectuals."

Smothers-show writers Mason Williams and Allan Blye have him pegged: "Pat's the kind of guy who sits in the corner of the barbershop. He makes it look like he's really trying, as if he were making a speech at the Kiwanis picnic. With his unglib-looking, leathery, beat face, people already start tittering. He can get a laugh without telling a joke. He's super-camp."

Paulsen is a South Bend, Wash., boy, brought up in San Francisco. He possibly inherited his penchant for the non sequitur from his Norwegian father. "Dad used to write long letters to the sports editor of the paper and they even printed everything he wrote about turnips."

Pat and his wife Betty Jane and their three children live in a very unfunny tract house in suburban Orange, Cal. Betty Jane doesn't think Pat's all that hilarious. "The only time I ever laughed was when his microphone fell off the stand." Pat doesn't care. "I couldn't stand a woman who laughed at me all the time." The only thing to disturb their domestic tranquility is the late-night phone calls from adolescent-girl fans at slumber parties. The Paulsen number is, or was, listed.

He's got an indefinable something that grabs females of all ages. He gets love letters from schoolgirls. Middle-aged Missouri matrons stop him on the street. "I think they all want to mother him," says Tommy. "Hell, even I want to mother him." END

The headlines of the ABC News releases about Judd make no bones about what kind of a show it is. Says one: "JUDD DEFENDS ENRAGED FATHER WHO HAS KILLED DAUGHTER'S ABORTIONIST." And another: "'TO KILL A MADMAN'—JUDD DEFENDS YOUNG INTELLECTUAL CHARGED WITH TRIPLE MURDER."

From these you gather this is not a show for the tots. Indeed, it is brought to you by executive producer Paul Monash, of Peyton Place repute (good or ill, depending on how you look at it). And Mr. Monash, in his original announcement of this show, also pulled no punches. He described Judd as an attorney who is, he said, "high-powered, high-priced, high-tension, high-living." "He may bring to mind," Mr. Monash punched on, "men like Lee Bailey or Percy Foreman or Edward Bennett Williams; actually he is none of these and all of these."

Mr. Monash also said that Judd "seems bigger-than-life, as a television hero should." The fact is that Judd, as played by Carl Betz (formerly of The Donna Reed Show), does not seem bigger than life; indeed, compared to the life that goes on around him, he doesn't seem big enough. This is not, we hasten to add, his fault alone. His assistant, Ben Caldwell (as played by Stephen Young), also has the same trouble. And so too do many of the guest stars. To make up for this, almost every episode we have seen has been, to paraphrase Mr. Monash, overdirected, overplayed, overtense and even overboard. Not that parts of these have not been at times exciting; they have. But the violence is objectionable, and the actors play every scene as if the show would rise or fall on what we can only describe as the madness in their Method. Several times we have had the feeling we are not watching a whole show at all, but rather a series of auditions.

Actually, the best episode we have seen so far was the "young intellectual" one. Here, it is true, you had the familiar overdirected, underdetected villain (Len Birman) and the familiar story—so dear to the hearts of Hollywood scriptwriters—of the boy who, despite the fact he has hacked to death three girls in sleeping bags, is, in the writer's view, merely misunderstood. And we get the full psychiatric treatment on this, complete with such one-liners as "I was emancipated in 1954—my father came home and beat up my mother and stole my savings and then left again" and "I wouldn't wear a red shirt because my mother locked me in a storeroom which was full of pickled beets." But somehow, and for once, it was all saved by a wonderful switch at the end. And also for once, we had a toned-down, able performance by a witness who had ESP (Carmen Matthews). And, amazingly, practically no violence. An episode like that gives you high hopes—even high-powered hopes.
